Bridging the gap between innovation and later-stage financing for biotech in Europe

In the format provided by the authors

Assembly of datasets and analysis methods

Data on venture financing rounds for biotech companies based in the USA and Europe announced in 2021 and 2022 were sourced from GlobalData with a minimum deal value of US$0.1 million. Some of the deals were completed in 2023, but the date of announcement was used in the cut-offs for simplicity.

This resulted in a dataset containing 1,965 deals for US companies and 483 deals for European companies, which are listed in Supplementary Table 1 and Supplementary Table 2, respectively. The complete deal set was used as the basis for Figure 1a.

This overview is meant to provide general quantitative insight in the differences in financing capability for US-based and European-based biotech companies. In an effort to treat the data as unbiasedly as possible, the data were not filtered, and so in some cases deals may account for only a portion of a financing round, leading to a larger number of overall deals than if multiple deals associated with a singular financing round were manually consolidated into a single deal for that round. Following review of deals occurring with the same biotech companies in the 2021–2022 timeframe, this phenomenon seemed to be similarly represented in both the USA and Europe and in most instances seemed consistent with qualifying as separate financing deals.

Comparisons based on defined financing rounds are presented in Figure 1b and summarized in Supplementary Table 3 and Supplementary Table 4 for US and European companies, respectively. Of the 2,448 deals in the dataset, 917 (~40% of the total number of deals; 712 deals for US companies and 205 for European companies) were labelled as series A, B, C, D, E or F by GlobalData and were used for the analysis in Figure 1b to provide the median deal values at each series stage. As shown in Figure 1a, the remaining 1,521 deals that were not labelled in the dataset — largely reflecting early-stage less-structured financing rounds — were responsible for around a quarter of the total funding raised in both the USA and Europe (23% in the USA and 25% in Europe). We therefore considered that the exclusion of these deals would not compromise the comparison of deal stages shown in Figure 1b. The uncharacterized entries are included in Figure 1a to provide an overarching picture of the total financing that goes into US-based companies compared with European companies.

Figure 1c focuses on the top 10 venture rounds in the USA and Europe in 2022. While Figures 1a and 1b provide numbers comparing total financing, median deal value and deal number for US and European venture investments, Figure 1c indicates that the patterns that are observed through medians are also apparent at the top for venture raises. This analysis was based on two deal subtypes defined in the GlobalData database: start-up/seed and late-stage/growth capital. Start-up/seed deals are defined as series A and earlier, while late-stage/growth capital deals are series B and beyond. Five deals in the set of 40 summarized in Supplementary Tables 5–8 were not labelled as series A–F; however, they were included as they were still defined as subtypes start-up/seed or late-stage/growth capital. Additional review of the deal information provided confidence that these deals were relevant to the aim of the analysis.
